

I'm writing in regard to the below article from my local new WTHR 13...

"The CBA is petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to allow its Indiana member banks to make sales calls to previous customers on the Do Not Call list by using something called the established business relationship exemption.

If approved, that would allow anyone you've done business with in the last 18 months, from banks to your dry cleaner, to make the nightly sales pitch."

I think this would be a horrible change and the CBA should NOT be granted these changes. People have asked to be on the "no call list" for a reason! And it's a "NOOOO Call List." If this is allowed to go through, it will just make people angry with those companies for going 'around' their wishes.

Personally, if I receive a call from someone if this is allowed to go through, I will tell them 'I will NEVER do business' with them again! Almost makes me wish it does go through so I can tell the companies how I feel. You can tell them this statement at the hearing and then they can see how many people they will be making mad.
